

Photo oxidation is a type of chemical reaction that takes place when a molecule absorbs light energy and then becomes reactive, resulting in the release of oxygen and the formation of chemical byproducts. This reaction is different from other types of oxidation, as the light energy acts as a catalyst. An example of photo oxidation in everyday life is the discoloration of a car's paint when it is exposed to ultraviolet light from the sun.