

A matrix is a rectangular array of numbers, symbols, or expressions, arranged in rows and columns, to be used in mathematical calculations. Usually, each row and column of a matrix represents an individual data item or variable. Matrices can be used to represent a wide variety of data, such as multivariate statistics, linear algebra, linear transformations, systems of equations, and more.