

Photosynthesis is the most important biochemical process in the world, responsible for converting sunlight, carbon dioxide and water into oxygen and glucose (a sugar molecule and a fundamental energy source for organisms). This process is essential for all life on Earth, as it forms the basis of the food chain and provides oxygen for animals to breathe. Plants, algae and some bacteria are the only organisms capable of performing photosynthesis.