

Matrices are a type of mathematical object used to represent data in a two-dimensional array of numbers. They are typically used to represent linear transformations and can be used to carry out computations such as addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division. Matrices can also be used to represent graphs and other objects. Each element in a matrix is referred to as a cell or entry and is typically represented by a number.

Length: 1000